Let's Start!

A tricky beggar gets a meal!

Learning Outcome

Describe detailed facts about events or actions in work and social contexts, in written or spoken situations.

Ask your partner:

- Have you ever played tricks on people? What kind?
- How would you feel if someone tricked you into giving them something?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about myths and legends, culture and traditions.
- I can talk about past situations that did not happen.
- I can report facts about events and actions.

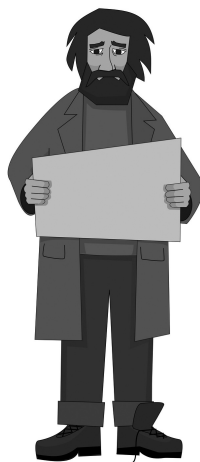

Let's Explore!

The generous but gulliblefarmer.

* "Gullible" means easily deceived or tricked.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

An old Irish beggar was walking in the countryside, when he came upon a farmer's house. If he hadn't been so hungry, he wouldn't have stopped at the little house. Thinking that perhaps he could get a hot meal, he knocked on the door and asked the farmer if he could have some food. The food being cooked smelled delicious! If the farmer hadn't been such a generous person, he wouldn't have invited the beggar for dinner.

The farmer was very generous so he graciously welcomed the beggar. As the beggar entered the farmer's dining room, he noticed the two other people being seated at the table were a French and a German traveler. "Since you are the last one to arrive, it is quite natural that you will help us by cutting and serving the chicken," said the farmer. If the beggar had arrived earlier, he would not have served the chicken. Without any hesitation the Irish beggar agreed, and they brought him a whole chicken. The chicken being carried towards him was huge! He cut off the head, gave it to the farmer, and said, "You are the head of this group, so you will have the head of the chicken." Then, he cut off the neck, and gave it to the farmer's wife and said, "You are next to the head, so you get the neck."

As he gave the two wings to the farmer's two daughters, he said, "The two of you will soon fly away from your nest, so of course you get the wings." The portions being served to the other guests were tiny. He turned to the Frenchman and the German and said, "You unfortunate fellows are a long way from home," so he gave them each a chicken leg. Then, he thought for a moment and said, "I am just a humble Irish beggar, so I'll eat whatever is left." The trick being played on them was becoming clear! If the farmer had been more wary of the stranger, they all would have had more chicken to eat. But the farmer did not regret his decision to let the beggar in. If he had turned the beggar away, he would have felt guilty. He was glad the beggar got a good meal.

Let's Practice!

Lucy practices the vocabulary from the text!

Learning Points

The Past Perfect: Third Conditional

You use a Past Perfect clause in the third conditional.

You use the third conditional to talk about past situations that did not happen.

For example:

If I had gone to class more, I would have passed the test.

In this example, the if-clause (condition) contains the Past Perfect (subject + had + past participle). The result clause usually has would, but you can use might when you want to talk about a less likely result.

For example:

If I had gone to class more, I might have passed the test.

You often use the third conditional to talk about regrets.

Examples:

- If the beggar had arrived earlier, he would not have served the chicken.
- If the farmer hadn't been such a generous person, he wouldn't have invited the beggar for dinner.
- If he hadn't been so hungry, he wouldn't have stopped at the little house.
- If the farmer had been more wary of the stranger, they all would have had more chicken to eat.
- If he had turned the beggar away, he would have felt guilty.

Learning Points

The Participle Clause: Being + Past Participle

Similar to relative clauses, you use participle clauses after a noun. This gives you more information about the noun.

You can use being + past participle like you do with a continuous passive relative clause:

The movie being shown tonight was filmed in Australia.

(= The movie that is being shown tonight was filmed in Australia.)

The clothing being made here was designed by my brother.

(= The clothing that is being here was designed by my brother.)

Examples:

- The food being cooked smelled delicious!
- The two other people being seated at the table were a French and a German traveler.
- The chicken being carried toward him was huge!
- The portions being served to the other guests were tiny!
- The trick being played on them was becoming clear!
